

FLOOD DANGER WEST OF DIXON INCREASING TODAY

Expect to Reach Collins This Afternoon

TEST FAILED TO INDICATE HE IS ALIVE

Cave City, Ky., Feb. 11.—Barring unlooked for developments, indications at 12:30 o'clock this afternoon, were that Floyd Collins would not be extricated before late tonight from Sand Cave, in which he has been trapped for 12 days.

BULLETIN
By Associated Press Leased Wire
Chicago, Feb. 11.—Tests made by radio-casting station KYY here duplicating those made at Sand Cave, Ky., which were said to demonstrate that Floyd Collins, entombed explorer, is still alive, have failed to show breathing or heart beats, either closed with Chicago Herald & Examiner.

Cave City, Ky., Feb. 11.—(By The Associated Press)—Daylight today found the diggers at the bottom of the 'Floyd Collins rescue tunnel working tirelessly and hoping any moment to break through into a tunnel which might lead to the imprisoned man. So far, the finding of such a tunnel remains a matter of good fortune, although the mining and geological experts are confident that the shaft will strike a passageway, either closed with muck or partly open, very soon.

Hopes for the rescue ran high with the diggers in the rescue shaft working through a dry sandy stratum presumed by geologists to overlay the roof of Collins' cave. The car of the banana oil sprayed down Collins' tunnel Sunday night and again Monday rose through the floor of the shaft last night. Extra precautions in timbering the shaft were made to protect the workmen should the roof of the tunnel or cavern suddenly be broken through.

Uncovered Small Cleft
A small cleft in the side of the shaft toward the north of Sand Cave side, was discovered at 8:12 feet, indicating the underground honeycombed section was near at hand. The sand layer at the bottom of the shaft was fairly dry.

The daily test to determine if Collins still lives, by means of an amplifying device hooked across the electric light circuit leading down to his prison has strengthened the belief of the physicians here that Collins still is alive. The main motion of the slight bulb around his neck as it moves in its socket with the rise and fall of his chest in breathing, is so regular that they are convinced Collins is still alive.

Barring infection of gangrene from his cramped 11 day imprisonment, the physicians here are strong that they can save him if he is reached soon.

Expect Connection Soon
A definite connection between the rescue shaft and the tunnel at 10 o'clock this morning was expected to be reached very soon. It was declared this morning by H. P. Carmichael, superintendent of the sinking of the shaft. "I am prepared at almost any time to find a definite connection between the shaft and the cavern," Carmichael said. "More crevices are getting larger, sand is getting away, and more cave crickets are reported by the diggers."

For the first time, the amplifier tests across the electric light wire leading down to Collins, failed completely this morning to record anything in the head phones. The last successful test at midnight repeated the "breathing" sounds at the regular rate of 18 per minute, but H. G. Lane, manager of the electric apparatus at the cave, said the test indicated the globe was out of Collins' socket or burned out.

Carmichael would not estimate how soon the Sand Cave tunnel might be pierced, but said, "We appear to be very close and I believe we will get Collins out alive."

Twenty hours was given by rescuers at 9 o'clock as the maximum time they expected to take to extricate Collins. The workers said that if he was not out of the hole in that time they would be disappointed. They were hopeful of reaching Collins much sooner, saying that it might come at any moment.

Discredit "Hoax" Theory
The military court investigation of cave rumors was made because of charges by certain persons that the reports were not acted properly in the rescue work and on account of reports and stories that had been circulated in regard to the situation at the cave, including a rumor that the entrapment of Collins might be a hoax. The Governor said the investigation was made to disprove the rumors.

DIXON PHONE CO. TO SPEND BIG SUM FOR CABLE LINES

Underground Cables to Be Put in During Spring Months.

The Dixon Home Telephone company will start work as soon as the frost is out of the ground, on the installation of another long section of cable, which will carry their lines in various parts of the city east of the Illinois Central tracks. Manager Louis Pitcher appeared before the city council last evening and permission was granted the company to proceed with the improvement.

The installation of cable carrying the telephone wires, is the last word in the operation of modern telephone systems and the local company have already installed many miles of this cable in and about the city. The company has now completed the rebuilding of its lines west of the Illinois Central railroad tracks and on the north side of the river and these sections of the city together with that north of Third street, east of the arches is being served by underground cables, thus eliminating many hundreds of poles.

The work of demolishing the old lines is progressing rapidly, the old cables being chopped into cord wood lengths as it has no further value except for the improvement.

To Cost About $15,000.
The estimated cost of the improvement this spring is $15,000 and calls for the laying of 12,533 feet of leaded telephone cable containing 1,117,485 feet of wire. The laying of this cable will not completely do away with the poles that have carried the lines in the past, but only a few of these will be necessary at distributing points. On the north side of the river, the line will be placed underground commencing at Chamberlain street on North Galena avenue and running to the city limits.

The great part of the work will be carried on south of the river this year and the program calls for placing underground cable on the following streets:

On Dixon avenue, Second street to Chicago road.
On East Third street, Dixon to Walnut avenue.
On Chicago road, Dixon to Walnut avenue.
On Franklin road, Chicago road easterly to city limits.
On Highland avenue, Eighth street to Eleventh street.
On Eleventh street, Highland to Madison avenue.
On Ninth street, Highland to Madison avenue.
The application of Fred Sanford to erect an electric sign on North Galena avenue was granted by the city council. The board of local improvement awarded the contract for the construction of a sanitary sewer on North Dixon avenue from Broadway to East Graham street to the National Construction company of Davenport, Ia.

Amplifiers May be Installed in House

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 11.—(By The Associated Press)—Protest against "too much noise and talk" was filed by the back row members of the House today and the result may be the installation of amplifiers in the House chamber so that all may hear what is going on.

Representative Milton T. Booth, Atkinson, sponsored the resolution which was endorsed by others voting far from the speaker's dais who said that incessant conversation and noise by members in front of them during the session prevents them from hearing. Booth, Homer Tice, Greenview, and J. E. McMackin, Salem, were named members of a committee to investigate the cost of amplifiers to combat the evil.

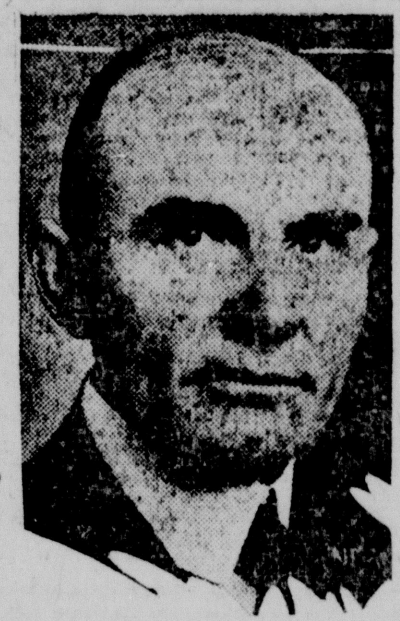

Winter Grains Unhurt by Winter Ice Storm

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 11.—Winter grains have been hurt very little, if any, as a result of the December ice storm, according to a bulletin issued by the weather bureau of the United States department of Agriculture today. The condition of wheat is only fair in parts of the south third of the state, probably due to the droughty conditions that prevailed at the time for the germination," the bulletin said.

RESULTS LAST ELECTION GET CONGRESS' O. K.

Final Attest Given in Joint Session of Congress Today.

By Associated Press Leased Wire
Washington, Feb. 11.—The results of the November election received the final attest of Congress today. The statement by Senate President pro tem Cummins that the count of electoral votes showed Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts and Charles G. Dawes of Illinois, to have been elected, and the ensuing of the ballots in the Journal of the Houses closed the political contest in accordance with constitutional requirements.

Barely half an hour was set aside for the ceremony. Pursuant to a concurrent resolution for the joint assembly, the Senate marched to the House chamber, preceded by the sergeant at arms and accompanied by pages carrying the electoral votes in locked boxes.

Senator Cummins presided with Speaker Gillett at his left. Charles G. Dawes of Massachusetts 332 votes; J. W. Davis, West Virginia, 136; Robert M. LaFollette, Wisconsin 13 votes.

The whole number of votes cast for vice president 531.

Charles G. Dawes of Massachusetts 332 votes; J. W. Davis, Nebraska, 136 votes and Burton K. Wheeler, Montana, 13 votes.

Senator Cummins then dissolved the convention with the traditional words: "This announcement of the election is made by the President and Vice President of the Senate, pro tempore of the Senate, under the constitution and laws of the United States, deemed a sufficient decision of the persons elected for the terms beginning March 4, 1925 and shall be entered together with a list of the votes so cast on the Journal of the Senate and House."

Following the ceremony both houses resumed their routine business.

STATE BUDGET IS REDUCED BY GOVERNOR SMALL

Considerably Less Than That of Two Years Ago, is Ready.

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 11.—(By The Associated Press)—Governor Len Small today completed the state budget for presentation to the general assembly asking a total appropriation for all purposes of $273,395,898, as against the total of $331,631,215, asked two years ago.

According to an analysis of the budget prepared for the press by the Governor, "this shows a reduction of $58,235,317, or more than $3,000,000, after eliminating the appropriation of $55,000,000 for soldiers' compensation bonds."

"Requested increases" in appropriations contained in the budget over amounts of two years ago, the analysis said, "are found almost entirely in those asked for the charitable institutions. Increases in the cost of commodities going into these institutions average ten per cent."

Building Program.
The Governor's building program, as reflected in the budget estimates, with few exceptions are confined to additions and betterments in welfare institutions and re-appropriation of funds for the state fair ground improvements.

The problem of housing the ever increasing population of unfortunates in state institutions is being met. Appropriations asked contemplate increased bed capacity and provide for a resultant increase in the number of attendants and other employees required in institutions.

"The ordinary operating expenses of the state government which include all state offices, courts, general assembly, code offices, boards and commissions, and the expense of the University of Illinois, are from the general revenue fund. This fund is provided for from the general property tax. The appropriation of two years ago from this fund was approximately $100,000,000, as was the $50,000,000 for this biennium the Governor has approved requests for one and one-half million less than that of two years ago.

For School Purposes.
"The University of Illinois and distributive school funds as provided for by direct mill tax amounts to $21,102,000. This is approximately the same as the appropriation made by the 33rd general assembly.

Interest and bond retirement on the soldiers' compensation bonds and waterway bonds show a natural increase this biennium over the preceding one, as retirement on the soldiers' compensation bonds starts within the next two years. This year 1925 was $16,100,000 and this year will be $16,000,000.

"Two years ago the entire principal amount which was provided for the $100,000,000 hard road bond issue was appropriated, as was the $50,000,000 provided for in the soldiers' compensation bond issue.

"The budget this biennium carries only a re-appropriation of the unused portion of the $100,000,000 hard road bond issue and the $50,000,000 remainder in the original $20,000,000 waterway construction bond issue. The reduction in these items alone amounts to $36,000,000 over the appropriations of two years ago.

"The several departments which are financed with funds other than direct tax or from bond sales, include the state fire marshal's office, the Illinois and Michigan canal state and federal highways, the fish and game division, the U. S. Veterans Bureau fund, the retirement of principal and interest on state highway bonds, and the institutional revolving funds.

The increase in requests for the above outlined purposes this year is $25,900,000 over that of two years ago. Eight millions of this increase is for the retirement of principal and interest from the highway bonds, and the estimated increase in automobile license receipts."

HOUSE REFUSES TO RECESS; LINCOLN WILL BE HONORED

Numerous Bills Introduced at Day's Session of Assembly.

By Associated Press Leased Wire

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 11.—Members of the House, by a vote of 62 to 33, refused to concur in a Senate resolution to recess today until next week and decided to remain in session Thursday for memorial service in honor of Lincoln's birthday. The vote was taken on a motion by Representative Homer Tice, Greenview, to have the speaker appoint a committee to arrange a program. Members of the committee, in addition to the speaker, were Tice, S. R. Turner, Chicago, and M. H. Ide, Lewisville.

The appropriation committee recommended passage of the memorial bill to appropriate $50,000 for the attorney general's department but the judiciary committee, which had been authorized to make an adverse report on the Schumaker memorial re-appropriation resolution, delayed action.

For Gasoline Tax.
A bill for another gasoline tax of two cents a gallon to be paid by the retailer to the Secretary of State was introduced by Representative Lincoln Bancroft, Greenup. It would permit payment of the tax on gasoline used in motor boats, airplanes and stationary gas engines or gasoline used by farmers.

An appropriation bill of $19,532,500 for the University of Illinois, offered by Representative Roger Little, Champaign, was referred to the appropriations committee. Representative J. M. Peppers, Aurora, presented a measure to require all persons applying for an automobile license to furnish an indemnity bond in the sum of $5,000 and show evidence of financial ability to pay damages which might be incurred.

Wants Primary Abolished.
Elimination of the primary election system is provided for in a bill presented by Representative Norman H. Flagg, Mexico, which would repeal all primary election laws and provide for delegate nominating conventions.

By mutual agreement with the House and Senate decided upon February 25 and 26 as the date for its visit to the University of Illinois, the Senator Webster moved that his bill, providing for changes in the law, to give township collectors in Cook county more time for the collection of taxes be moved to second reading.

Under the present system, the senator said, the board of review and board of assessors in Cook County are so crowded with work that they are unable to certify the tax books to the collectors much before the first of March, giving the collector ten days in which to collect the tax and inflicting unjust penalties upon the tax payers for failure to pay taxes when due. On objection of Senator Keasinger of Aurora and Senator

CITY APPEALS TO UNCLE SAM TO GIVE HELP

Conditions Surpassing Those of Three Years Ago are Feared

BULLETIN.

Mayor Frank D. Palmer, co-operating with Secretary Harold Woodlief of the Chamber of Commerce, had been successful in securing the assistance of the United States Engineers office at Rock Island, with a view of preventing a repetition of flood damage here 3 years ago, at noon today. In a long distance telephone message with the office at the federal building in Rock Island, Mayor Palmer was assured that the order to close the gates at Sterling would be given forthwith.

It is believed that by closing the gates that the stage of water may be raised sufficiently to elevate the ice gorged between Dixon and Sterling. When a sufficient raise in the stage of water is reached, the gates will again be opened and by this method it is hoped that the outgoing deluge will carry away a great deal of the gorged ice which is now threatening a flood here.

Flood conditions surpassing those of three years ago confronted both business and residential sections of Dixon early today with marked raises in the stage of water in Rock River. A gorge which had formed three miles east of Nelson and in the vicinity of the Rocks, threatens to break through to overflow its banks probably late today and in some low places this had already taken place.

In the west end of the city, seven houses were already surrounded by water which reached a depth of about three feet at 10 o'clock this morning and the stage was increasing hourly. Secretary Harold Woodlief had planned to present the situation to the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce at a meeting this noon, with a view of obtaining some relief.

Seek to Break Gorge
It had been suggested that by closing the government gates at Sterling, the stage of water could be raised to a level which would float or dislodge the heavy gorges and then by opening the gates, the ice would pass through. The river from Sterling to Prophetstown was open and no damage was anticipated below the Sterling dam.

The ice started to move out of Rock river here about 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, marking a new record time for the clearance of the river. It has been several years since the ice has started to move early in the morning. At this point, the ice had frozen to a thickness of between 15 and 20 inches, but the mild weather of last week had honeycombed it to a great degree.

With the breaking up of the ice between Dixon and Oregon, the stage of water rose rapidly, until the water below the Dixon dam had almost reached a level with the dam. The ice gorged east of Nelson near the Rocks and this gorge was holding back the water and was holding today and increasing hourly. The river was reported to be clear between Dixon and Rockford, with considerable ice moving. The stage of water here stationary until 7 o'clock last evening and at 8:30 until 8 this morning a raise of seven inches an hour continued. Between 6 and 8 o'clock this morning the water rose about four inches with the dislodgement of a small gorge west of the city but this soon stopped and between 8 and 10 o'clock this morning the water had raised seven inches and was continuing to come up.

West End Inundated
The river had broken out of its banks in the west end of the city and was surging against the filling cellars and basements. At the Dixon Inn, water began seeping into the basement at midnight and at 8 o'clock a pump had been installed to prevent water from entering the building. The necessity of pulling the fire in the heating plant.

The Illinois Northern Utilities company were suffering considerably from the sudden flood stage. The hydro plants at Oregon and Freeport were shut down and the Sterling plant was still operating but producing very little power. The Peconatoles river at Freeport had started on a rampage, necessitating the disconnection of the hydro plant at that place. While the stage of water in Rock River had receded somewhat at Oregon, the hydro plant and boilers were at a standstill and will probably remain in this condition for several days.

Get Power From Chicago
The Dixon steam plant was being operated at capacity today. The electric power was being supplied through "tie-in" plants from the Public Service company of Chicago. The situation at noon was alarming and threatened to be much worse than that of three years ago, when the city

ALWAYS OUT OF WORK.

Several million Americans are continuously out of employment. Such is the report of the Russell Sage Foundation. (It doesn't include the economic parasites who live the life of ease without contributing anything to production or progress.)

The estimate of "several millions" as the total of people out of work is an average for good and bad years combined.

During hard times as many as six millions are jobless. Even in booms, as many as a million are out of work for weeks and sometimes for months at a time. A considerable part of this unemployment during prosperity is due to "floaters" who drift from one town to another or work a while and then loaf until their money runs short.

Striking an average, at least a tenth of the workers of our country are out of work, year in and year out. One man may be jobless only a month in a year. Twelve like him are equivalent to one man idle the year-round.

In this situation is a tremendous economic waste, from the national viewpoint. For men consume whether they are producing or not. When a man isn't doing a tap of work he must eat, wear clothes and have heat and shelter. And these, naturally, have to be produced by someone.

It stands to reason that the prosperity or standard of living of the American people could be raised a tenth if ways could be devised to keep the chronically-idle-tenth busy all the time.

The most sensible suggestion ever made has not been generally adopted, though it is so old that it's beginning to get gray whiskers. This suggestion is that the national government, states and municipalities should embark on big engineering projects when times are dull. Thus hundreds of thousands or millions of men could be utilized at such needed construction work as the building of roads, bridges, public buildings and parks. Governor Small helped at this with his road building last year and the year before.

Such a system would have to be elastic. Government construction work would expand when a lot of men were jobless, and shrink to next to nothing when labor was at a premium in private industry.

Eventually such a system will come into use—probably not overnight by legislative reform, but by evolution.

It would stop the economic or national loss. And it would solve the jobless man's personal problem—enabling him to produce continuously, a better way than taking care of him by charity, unemployment insurance or by eating up his meager and hard-earned savings.

WATER.

California engineers plan to divert part of the mighty Colorado river and make it flow westward to the Pacific. The water, needed in Los Angeles and along the way, will obey man's orders and travel across mountains and deserts. It is a great undertaking, and our civilization is proud of its power to do it.

If Yuan, ancient Chinese emperor, could speak from the grave he would say: "I did a greater job than that shortly after Noah's Ark flood. I shifted the entire watershed of China, in some places as much as 600 miles."

FLYING.

American airplane industry last year turned out nearly 13 million dollars worth of flying machines, says census report. This included 505 airplanes and 82 seaplanes. For each plane produced, the aircraft industry had about $22,000 of product. While this wasn't the average cost of planes (for the total must include a lot of repairs and extra parts), it's plain that flying still is a rich man's game.

If your auto stalls, you telephone a garage. If your flying machine stalls, your friends telephone an undertaker.

FLYING.

U. S. army aviators flew more than nine million miles in 1923, it's announced, with a loss of 18 lives. This is a life lost for approximately every 500,000 miles of flying.

Army flyers do a lot of circus stunts, and in battle maneuvers take chances civilians wouldn't. An airplane in the hands of a skilled, cautious pilot is easily 100 times safer than most people realize. The hazard is swiftly growing less.

FIRE.

Tremendous quantities of gasoline are being used. It will surprise many to learn that the oil industry is selling more fuel oils than gasoline.

Coal men need search no further for what has put such a big crimp in their sales. Oil is increasingly taking the place of coal. One reason for this is the instability of the coal industry, due to strife between miners and operators.

FORESTS.

Artificial lumber, made from waste fiber of sugar cane, weighs only a fourth as much as pine board, thus cutting transportation costs.

It is not impossible that the solution of our forestry problem will be worked out in the laboratory—synthetic timber. Asbestos shingles and concrete already have cut quite a hole in the lumber trade.

When the head of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment said that if the law were enforced on congressmen for a week it would be repealed at the week end, of course he did not mean it. It was merely being nasty to congress. He knew that congress has no power to repeal the prohibition amendment nor to enact any law permitting what it forbids. He probably knew that this includes "beer and wine." And of course he knew that few congressmen are really honest. He was merely the stock of "hypocrites." The mystery is how it could be imagined that votes in congress could be got by insulting congressmen.

If it is not one sort of a quack, it is another. The quack doctors being mostly suppressed or side-tracked, we now have the quack psychologists. Fortunately, the mind is tougher than the body.

How is one to tell them apart? Easily enough. If it is "worth the money" it is quack. If it is "useless," it is real. The quack offers to sell you, for money, a short-cut to raising your wages or to making other people do what you wish for your advantage. The real psychologist offers you, for hard work, the chance to learn more about the general operations of the human mind. The one appeals to the greed to get, the other to the greed to know. Real psychology, after you know it, is as "useful" as history, astronomy, mathematics, or any other impersonal enlargement of the mental outlook.

Quack psychology pretends to help you personally, to get something for yourself, now. The better the "selling points," the worse the article.

OUR GAS BILLS WOULD PAY DEBT

How can America afford to be so "extravagant?" Figures just out show that we have spent on new automobiles alone, in the past year and a half, enough to pay the much-discussed French debt. Counting all cars and operating expenses, a few months would cover what France is staggered at the thought of raising in ninety-nine years. We have more than five times as many pleasure cars as all the rest of the world combined, besides nearly all the "movies" and radios. We have spent on these things in a few years more than the total savings of an equal number of years just preceding. And yet we have saved more than ever. Where did it come from?

Not out of savings, nor by going without other things. Secretary Hoover has computed that it all came out of increased production. Our man-hour output has grown by almost exactly the amount of these things. We have worked harder, more better organized, and have harnessed more mechanical power to each worker. We wanted these luxuries, so we simply "humped" ourselves, and made them extra.

NOT ROOM FOR IMMORTALITY HERE

Life is like a continuous performance "movie." If those in the seats never got out, those in the waiting line could never get in. Unless there were age and death, there could not be youth and progress. There would soon be no more room on earth, and long before that there would be no more chance of advancement for the young.

This globe was too small for anything deathless to be planted on. There is room for immortality only in the reaches of the infinite—or in that mystic state of which the Scholastics disputed, in which a million angels might dance on the point of a needle, not because they were small, but because they were mutually interpenetrable, so that, like thought, they could all be in the same place at the same time.

1000 TO 1 AGAINST WAR

Suppose the protocol of mutual assistance were now in force, Greece and Turkey have a difference. Turkey has expelled the Greek Patriarch and Archbishop, which act Greece claims is contrary to the Treaty of Lausanne.

ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS

by Olive Roberts Barton

NO. 3—GRANDPA FROG'S SPRING SUIT

"Come right in, Grandpa Frog."

"Dear me!" said Mister Rubadub of Scrub Up Land.

"What are you 'dear-me-ing' for?" asked Peg Leg, the peddler, who had come with the Twins to this interesting place.

"Well, I guess you would say, 'dear me,' too, if you had to fix up Grandpa Frog for spring," said Mister Rubadub.

"Does he get dirty?" asked Nancy. "Dirty? Well, as he sleeps all winter right down in the mud at the bottom of Lily Pond, I should say he does get dirty. The worst of it is, his green coats gets so faded you can't do a thing with it. He has to have a new one every year. I've never been able to fix him yet. Where he gets his spring outfit, I'll never tell you."

"It's as simple as eating chocolate drops," said Peg Leg. "I have green coats to sell. Perhaps I can fix him."

"I hope so," sighed Mister Rubadub. "Listen a minute, I think I hear him coming."

"Sure enough—Grandpa Frog's deep voice was calling very plainly, 'Rubadub, rubadub, chugabug! Rubadub, chugabug!'"

"He's saying how do you do in frog language," explained the little fairy man. Then he called out, "Come right in, Grandpa Frog. I'm ever so glad to see you. I hope you had a good winter's sleep and didn't get too thin."

Grandpa Frog hopped up quite close. "Not too bad," he croaked. "Left me hoarse, though. Then he added, 'And shabby.'"

"Well I have seen you look better," admitted Rubadub. "Your clothes hang on you and they are all wrinkled up and yellow. You need a new suit."

"New suit," agreed Grandpa hoarse-

ly. "Yes, I need a new suit."

"Please look over my things," said Peg Leg, spreading out his wares. "I've got several nice coats and waistcoats. Would you mind trying them on?"

"Glad to, glad to," croaked Grandpa hopped up and looking the things over. "But I'm afraid they won't fit. But I'll try them on anyway. Never mind taking off my old coat. Just leave it on. I'm afraid I'll catch cold."

Nancy and Nick and Peg Leg started trying coats on the old frog gentleman. They tried on every coat in the little fairy peddler's pack and none of them fitted at all.

"They were too big or too light or not the right color or something."

Grandpa's eyes twinkled. "Excuse me," he said. "I'll step around the corner a minute, but I'll be back soon."

And away he hopped.

Mister Rubadub scratched his head. "I can't send him away to the Land Where Spring Is Coming looking like that," he thought. "I'll get a new suit for him."

But before Peg Leg or the Twins had time to answer, back came Grandpa Frog. He was in a brand new coat of brightest green. The old faded wrinkled one gone entirely. Such a dude you never saw. "Not too bad," he croaked. "Left me hoarse, though. Then he added, 'And shabby.'"

"Well I have seen you look better," admitted Rubadub. "Your clothes hang on you and they are all wrinkled up and yellow. You need a new suit."

"New suit," agreed Grandpa hoarse-

Turkey denies it, and refuses arbitration. Under the protocol, Greece would demand either arbitration or trial before the world court, if that body decided in her favor.

Turkey would either accept one of these methods or be declared the "aggressor" in any war that might result, even if Greece struck the first blow. If there was arbitration and it went against Greece, on the ground that the expulsions were within Turkey's sovereign rights, Greece would accept the verdict, under the same penalties. The chances are a thousand to one that no war would result, in either of these events.

In the thousandth case, the "aggressor" would be boycotted by everybody, at once. Such nations as chose to go further would consult as to steps against the aggressor. Nobody could take steps in its favor, without risking the same consequences. The war would be decisive, would hurt only the offender, and would not disrupt the rest of the world. America's obligation would be confined to a peaceful boycott.

Is Today Your Birth Anniversary?

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 11.—Persons born this day like domestic life and make good parents. They are extremely fond of children. Sincere and honest, they are persons of strong convictions, which they rarely hesitate to express. They have executive ability and usually are a success in business. Women are fond of pretty clothes and bright colors and yet they are not of the flapper type.

To be qualified to serve on a jury in Great Britain, a woman must own a house valued at not less than $100 or live in one with not less than 10 windows.

Now there can be no question as to the supremacy of Cleveland Six performance.

Five weeks ago, at Culver City, Cal., its record of 1,000 miles in 848 minutes electrified America.

On January 27th, also at Culver City, Cleveland Six lowered this record to 1,000 miles in 745 minutes. This astounding performance is 1 hour and 43 minutes faster—an average of over 80 miles an hour.

It is 41 minutes faster than the time recently made by a higher-priced six-cylinder car.

It ranks as one of the outstanding feats in the entire 25 year history of automotive development and progress.

Yet this second run was made with a deeper purpose than the accomplishment of this amazing speed and endurance victory.

It was made to verify, under the most grueling conditions, the superb design, materials and workmanship that stamp the Cleveland Six as one of the outstanding cars of all time.

You may never drive 1,000 miles in 745 minutes. You may never subject your car to so heart-breaking a test of endurance.

But whatever Cleveland Six model you select will give you the same unexampled engineering and structural qualities that have made this marvelous feat possible.

FORTY-THIRD INSTALLMENT

"This is Margaret, Admah, I think you'd better come home right away."

"What's the matter?" he asked sharply. Margaret wouldn't have spoken like that for nothing.

"Flora Lee's had a sort of upset. Don't be scared."

"Margaret!" It came like a groan. "What's all about? What's happened! You've got to tell me something—"

"It's about the baby," said her voice hoarsely.

"Where are you now?"

"At the—your house. I've been trying for an hour."

"All right. I'm coming," he murmured, then hurried toward the check room for his hat.

CHAPTER 71

It was nearing nine o'clock. Margaret and Admah sat in front of an open fire, for a cool drizzle had come with evening. Dr. Furniss—young Dr. Furniss, as he was called years after his father's death—was expected soon on his last call for the day. A calm had settled over Admah's spirit; it was because another glass of bourbon had done its soothing work. Or because Margaret was there?

Neither had spoken for several minutes. The house was still. The white uniform of a trained nurse, passing noiselessly along the balcony, startled him as a fleeting specter might have.

Then an oak knelt in the fireplace hissed and spat blue flames. Admah looked up at his glass. A whimsical thought came to him; when Pa Holtz had sat like this, drinking alone, there hadn't been any fancy Italian fireplace. An old stove, probably, with a ramshackle pipe running up through the roof.

"Margaret, he said at last dreamily, 'how long's she been asleep now?'"

"Since one o'clock. Charlie Furniss gave her something."

"Funny she asked for you instead of me."

"Was it?" Her tone grew momentarily hard, but softened again. "They were trying to find you. You'd been away from the office most of the morning."

"How long do you reckon you can stay, Margaret?"

She studied him an instant before replying, "Just as long as I'm useful, Admah."

He received this absent-mindedly, frowning.

"After this," he said suddenly, "I ain't got to put much stock in prophecies."

"You've been prophesying?" she asked.

"Not for over thirty years. I reckon I never told you how once I stood on the steps of All Souls' Church and saw Flo Lee bein' christened. Well, that mornin' I told a nigger mammy that some day I'd have one o' my own children sprinkled in style, at that very church. I wasn't much of a fortune teller that time."

"Poor Admah!" she whispered.

"Queer," he frowned, "how life seems to take you around with it. . . . Up with it, down with it. . . . But you can't leave go."

"Gotama Buddha thought of that, too."

"Who was he?"

"A Christian," said Margaret, "but every early one."

"Just look at me and Jo," he went on. "To be got nothing but children. No brains, no ambition. But he's got four children, and the oldest is going to college."

"Who's paying his way?" asked Margaret.

"That ain't the point. What I'm thinking is, Jo hasn't made much of himself, but he's got a boy he's mighty proud of. And I'll never have one."

At that he gave scientific verification to this broken sentence Calvin announced Dr. Furniss. Young Dr. Furniss was a brisk, neat, well-conditioned man of fifty.

"Good evenin', Miss Margaret," he began briskly. "And how are you, Mr. Holtz? What weather for June?"

"Good rain for the farmers," agreed Admah. It was as though they had met by appointment to discuss the weather.

"She hasn't waked since you left," said Margaret.

"Oh yes. She'll be drowsy for a while," Dr. Furniss announced pleasantly. "May I go right up?"

At Flora Lee's door the trained nurse was waiting to let the physician in; the husband was left outside to pace the hall runner and quarrel with his conjectures.

At half hour past, in Admah's estimation, when he looked at his watch he found that it was only eleven minutes. He could hear Flora

Lee's sweet voice droning on, then the doctor's response. He was laughing! That was a good sign.

Again Admah fell to pacing the hall runner, measuring his steps as though he had been a prisoner inside four narrow walls. That afternoon when he had come home and seen her lying drugged and bloodless, her body perfectly still, her half-closed eyes unresponsive, he had grown faint with a fear that she was going to die, going to leave him without a look or a word. All the vanity of the father-prospect had been shrouded in one black thought. He didn't care for children. For money for anything, but the one great love that had come to him like a miracle out of heaven. In the depths of his irreligious heart he had made a bargain with God and prayed that she should be restored to him. He had tried so hard to live up to her requirements in a husband. He knew how often he had failed and how his awkwardness must have annoyed her. But she had taught him so much, over-looked so many things. Gosh! What a kick he must have been ten years ago the night she rode home with him in his Ford. . . .

The bedroom door opened, young Doctor Furniss came out and gave the worried husband a friendly pat.

"There's bound to be a little temperature for a day or so. Two weeks in bed, I should say. That's going to be something of a job for Flora Lee!"

He chuckled at his own joke.

"There won't be any—I mean, no serious consequences?"

"There shouldn't be," replied Dr. Furniss, growing serious. "Only one thing. . . . He paused for a choice of expression, then made a poor show of his humorous bedside manner as he said, 'You know the sign that's up in the modern apartment house? No children admitted.'"

"You mean?" The doctor was merely saying what Admah had suspected.

"I'm afraid that's the case, my dear Mr. Holtz," he smiled, then gave him a brisk professional handshake. "Now go to bed and have a decent night's sleep."

"Can't I see her?"

"Oh, certainly. Make it brief, though, won't you?"

Admah tiptoed in toward the swan-bed whose pillars looked black as ebony in the dim light. He stood peering down, then from the pillows and coverlets came the familiar drawl, "Hello, old dear!"

"My sweet!" he whispered and sank on his knees.

"Don't be so tragic, Mr. Gump!" she challenged, putting out a hot little hand to rumple his thick hair. She turned uneasily and groaned, then said in a low, natural, laughing key, "I bet I'll be quiet at the Synagogue tonight. They'd most forgotten how to make a noise when I came back from Spain. Wasn't Bunney a silly jack? Ho-hum! What time is it?"

"About half past nine, honey."

"That dope Charlie Furniss gave me must have been private stock. I've had nice dreams. Who's downstairs?"

"How did she get here?" It came sharply, then with a wild little laugh. "I guess I scared her to death when I telephoned. But you weren't anywhere—and oh, Admah! I had to have somebody. It was all so fearful—"

Suddenly her arm went round his neck, and she clung to his shoulder, sobbing.

"There, my precious baby!" he murmured and he could feel her tears running along the bridge of his nose. "I wouldn't have you hurt for anything."

"You love me frightfully, don't you?" her little voice was singing in his ear. "You know I do."

"Then what were you doing away from your office when I was sick and wanted my old Gump?"

"I'll bet you can't guess," he chuckled, brightening.

"Remembering something?"

"It's the fifth of June," he said.

"What did you get me?" She released the arm that had been around his neck and searched his pocket for the box, which made a heavy bulge in his right side.

"I'll open it," he offered, and after several awkward gropings at the catch lifted the velvet lid and revealed his surprise. A circle of light, shining rays from a thousand prisms, it glowed before her eyes.

"You've gone and got that bracelet from Cummins!" she cried, and snatched the treasure greedily in both hands. "Admah, if I asked for it I believe you'd jump up and get me the moon."

"I reckon I'd try," he admitted, and kissed her shyly. For Miss Sullivan had opened the door. Even in his bliss and his dejection he despised the rich bed-spread which covered her. It seemed poisonous somehow.

CHAPTER 72

If Margaret Peake came to her brother-in-law's house with a view to simplifying a situation she reckoned without Flora Lee in whose atmosphere nothing could be simple. She was what Miss Sullivan called "a nervous patient." She slept poorly and chose the hours between midnight and dawn for telephoning; the night nurse disapproved, of course; only Miss Sullivan remained and even she, mechanically soothing person though she was, rushed from the sick room to sob on Margaret's shoulder. "I worked for two years in the State Insane Asylum but never before have I been called such—such things—boo-hoo!"

Margaret seldom appeared in Flora Lee's room for the very good reason that Flora Lee chose to regard her as an unwanted guest; sometimes she would relent, whimsically, suddenly and send Miss Sullivan out in search of her. Then there would be brief reconciliations to be followed by other flares of temper. Flora Lee would even accuse Margaret of trying to avoid her. On the fifth day Margaret tactfully suggested to Admah that Flora Lee was out of danger. But he would not hear of Margaret's going. Flora Lee was hard to get along with, he admitted, but she'd had a terrible shock, and people ought to put up with her, he said this with a gruff, scolding air that Margaret was ineffectually pathetic.

He was looking old, she thought, and the grey was beginning to show through his vigorous hair. Only the night before he had talked so optimistically about his future at the Works. She wondered if he was being quite frank with her or with himself. . . .

Then came the eighth day. Admah was called upon to act as referee in one of those feminine quarrels which every man dreads because there is something demonic in the rage of even the gentlest woman. He had breakfasted with Margaret and gone upstairs to say good morning—for Miss Sullivan, disregarding consequences, always aroused her patient at an early hour. He found her sitting up in bed, a long ivory mirror in her hand. A pretty picture of vanity she made, coquetting with her image, criticizing the effect of fresh rouge upon her lips.

"How like the devil I look," she soliloquized. "If Charlie Furniss keeps me in bed another week—oh, Miss Sullivan! Where's that leathery old fool?"

"I'll fetch her, honey," volunteered Admah.

"Never mind. I'm going to chuck her anyway. I'd a thousand times rather have a good nigger like Linda than one of those poor whites with a set of hospital manners."

Because there was little to say and less to do Admah stood his ground, waiting for the storm to pass, as it sometimes did, in a few short gusts. With the gesture of a crossed child she threw the mirror from her; it broke against the radiator and she laughed.

"I wish Margaret would stop thumping away at that piano," she complained.

"But she ain't playin' now, honey," he said. "It was only last night for a while."

"Oh. You've got to have music to amuse you."

"It was for you, dearie. You said you liked it—"

"I don't like dead marches. I suppose she wants me to die and—"

"I'll tell her not to play any more," he offered.

"You'll tell her? You'll do nothing of the kind. O Peg! Mah-gree!" Flora Lee's voice, normally so soft and drawing, could grow shrill and harsh as a locomotive whistle. Presently Margaret came upstairs and stood stiff, cool, smiling at the foot of the bed. She wore her coat and hat.

"Did you call me, Flora Lee?" she asked.

"Did I call you?" her sister mocked. "Peg, why are you always so damned affected? Where are you going?"

"I thought I'd better go back to town. You see—"

"So suddenly?" asked Flora Lee with an unfriendly smile.

"She's got a lot of work piled up at the office," was Admah's poor contribution.

"Indeed? I'm sure you could fetch it out here, couldn't you, Admah?" Flora Lee's carefully plucked eyebrows went up to a sharp angle. "You wouldn't want Margaret to walk out and leave you just for her work, would you?"

"I'd be mighty glad to have her stay," he mumbled.

Garage of Many Rooms to be Built in Dixon

The Chicago Tribune recently printed the following article in regard to Dixon people mentioned below:

Imagine for a moment the size of a house that boasts an eighteen room garage. Doesn't it bring to mind sunny Italian villas, great Norman castles and rambling English estates? This spring, Mrs. John Holston and Mrs. Douglas Harvey—the two musical and highly decorative Reynolds sisters of Dixon, Ill., you know—are planning to break ground for just such a garage, the first step of their beautiful new Rock river country place. As soon as the garage is finished they are going to move in and live there while the house itself is being built. And the house, unlike some in our rural communities that nestle in the shadow of gigantic outbuildings, is to be proportionately large and extremely handsome.

Mrs. Holston and Mrs. Harvey have purchased a great piece of land near Dixon, owned by the late Walter H. Page, but the Mr. Page who was at one time the American minister to Greece. It is an especially choice site, in a commanding position, surrounded by enormous rocks and crags, and well wooded, overlooking Rock river and the lovely rolling country roundabout.

These two feminine members of Chicago society have at present a small city retreat here, a smart little studio apartment at 17 East Elm street, from which they will journey forth often during the early spring months to oversee and hasten the progress of the spacious garage, that is to be their home until such time as the Rock river chateau shall be completed."

Boss of Clothing Dept. at Chester, is Arrested

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 10.—(By the Associated Press.)—Disappearance of a quantity of thread and cloth, traced to a hole in the clothing department of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary at Chester, has resulted in his arrest in Chester, pending full investigation, Judge C. H. Jenkins, director of the Department of Public Welfare announced today.

The boss was William Foehr, who has held the place three years. Insofar as the investigation revealed, no one else in the penitentiary was involved, but it is believed there was some one else, though whom the missing thread and cloth was disposed.

Judge Jenkins said no articles of clothing (as taken, and he was not certain whether Foehr was held on charges of larceny or conspiracy to defraud.

Public Health Service Locates Infected Oysters

By Associated Press Leased Wire

Washington, Feb. 11.—The public health service has concluded after investigation that the recent "excessive prevalence" of typhoid in New York, Chicago, Washington and several other cities is traceable to an oyster distributing company in the vicinity of West Sayville, N. Y.

In a report last night giving the general conclusions of its investigation, the health service said that, owing to changes affecting the source of supply, there was no reason to believe that oysters distributed since December 20 last by that company or any other large distributor, "have been any more of a factor in the spread of typhoid infection" than normally.

The Tangle

DIARY OF NURSE JOHNSON ON THE OBSTETRICAL CASE OF MRS. JOSEPH J. DIXON PRES-COTT, CONCLUDED

It is a strange thing that no one told little Jackie about his little brother. Ever Mr. Prescott seemed to have some hesitancy about this.

One morning, however, when the father was talking with the boy he said:

"Jackie, just as soon as your mother is well enough, you shall be taken to her, and then she will have a great surprise for you."

The child expectantly looked into his father's face, but since then he has not voiced his incessant desire, "I want my mummy."

Even this morning when he was brought into his mother's room he never unlocked himself from her arms. A most peculiar thing happened at this meeting. He seemed to have forgotten all about his little brother and Mrs. Prescott did not mention him.

"I've gettin' well, mummy," the boy asked as he covered the nervous hand lying on the coverlet with kisses and tears. "I get so blue without you. Won't you get well right away?"

"I'll get well, son, if you just keep on loving me," said Mrs. Prescott in a weak voice.

The child lifted great solemn eyes to hers and whispered: "I love you better than anybody. I love you better than God."

Then they held him up to kiss her lips, and took him away promising that he could come again to see her tomorrow.

I think that visit did more for Mrs. Prescott than any of the doctor's care or medicine. For the first time the tired, weeping look went out of her eyes and I thought I saw there a desire and will to live which I had not seen before.

For the first time she asked to have the other baby brought to her. To her she had always accepted the child when it had been laid in her arms, but had evinced no particular interest in it. Today she clutched it and her kisses fell softly on the top of its little bald head.

"Tomorrow you and I and Jackie will make the plans for our future lives. Tomorrow, my dear Jackie, I'll know what a great responsibility rests upon him," and then she signed and said, "Perhaps life won't be so hard after all. Perhaps it is selfish of me to feel this way."

"I don't you think so, nurse," she said, looking up at me with a bright smile—the first she had given me in all her illness.

"You seem to have everything to make your life happy," I answered. "Perhaps—who knows—perhaps that's true. At least I'll try to make it true."

Again she kissed the baby, and I held it in my little crib. (Copyright, 1925, N.E.A. Service, Inc.)

ALDEN DRAKE, formerly a sailor, now grown soft and flabby through a life of idle ease, visits Sallertown, where he meets—

JOE BUNTING, a seaman, with whom he drinks himself off his feet in a barroom. Awakening next morning Drake hears—

CAPTAIN STEVENS of the Orontes denounce him as a "dude." Aggry, Drake sneaks aboard the Orontes as one of the crew, but is recognized by Stevens and soundly trounced on two different occasions. Drake is put down on the ship's articles as Boy, thereby shaming him before—

MARY MAXWELL, daughter of the owner, who is a passenger on the Orontes. Captain Stevens develops into a wooer, but Mary appears not to realize that he is madly smitten with her. A shyness prevents him from speaking his love, however.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

When the noon observation placed the ship within two days sail of Table Bay, and preparations were afoot for coming into port, Captain Stevens made arrangements for the entertainment of Mary during the stay. She forgot her uneasiness, thawed towards him, sent him into the Seventh Heaven of delight with her eagerness. They sat at the luncheon table, pouring over a Cape Town guide book, long after the midday dinner had been cleared away. The steward was making his inventory of stores ready for re-victualing; and Drake was helping him in the lazaret beneath the saloon.

"You can stop at a hotel, Mary, and have a high old time," Stevens said, looking steadfastly into her animated face.

She glanced up at him with sharp reproof in her eyes, but he never saw that. He only saw the fair beauty of her, and it maddened him. He gathered her in his powerful arms as she half rose, and glued his lips to hers, while his breath issued hissing from his nostrils in the passionate spasms that had mastered him.

"Oh, would you dare!" she cried, half stifled. "You shall pay—"

Stevens laughed madly, and smothered her in a fiercer hug.

"Help," she cried. "Steward!"

Loyal Ike clambered out of the hatch, wide-eyed with fear. He could not ignore that cry; neither could he ignore the fact that the skipper was the foe he must attack. He spat on his thin pale hands, mumbled a curse, and laid a feeble grip on the skipper's arm. The next instant he was flung aside, Drake thrust forward, face white and eyes ablaze, and twisted a hand into the skipper's neckband. Stevens abruptly came to his senses then. For a moment he went pale, realizing what he had done. Then, while Mary ran to her cabin to fetch a glass of water, Drake forced a crisis. This was going to be a fight. That was the idea foremost in his mind. He felt a mild wonder whether or not he had hardened enough. But Stevens didn't seem eager to annihilate him.

"Steward!" It was the skipper's voice, cold, passionless.

"Yes!" said Ike, trembling.

"Tell Mister Twining to put this boy in irons!" Without another word, without a glance, Stevens went to his stateroom, leaving Drake standing there feeling foolish.

"Come along, me son," grinned Mr. Twining, jangling the irons. "I don't know just what bet you're paying by making this voyage, but you ain't welshing any part of it. Come along, me lad."

Shut out from the light of day when the hatch was replaced, Drake only knew of the ship's coming into port by the distant sounds and the changing motion. He knew when the seas diminished to gentle swells, he heard the weird cries of the men at the braces, later at clewlines and hatch was lifted, Ike crept down and unlocked the part of his irons which fastened him to a stanchion, and helped him to clamber into the saloon, still handcuffed, still smiling.

"Mr. Drake, I scarcely expected to meet you like this," said a solemn-looking individual in decorous attire, stepping forward and taking Drake's hand with an expression of horror at all hugely. He glanced at Mary; her blue eyes were wide with wonder. Stevens glared blackly at him over the top of a sheet of newspaper. The solemn man proceeded, holding out two envelopes: "Mr. Drake, I am Fielding of Fieldings and Powers, acting on the instructions of your law firm at home in your behalf. Here are the papers concerning your purchase of the Orontes. Captain Stevens does not appear willing to believe that he has placed his owner in irons!" Mr. Fielding's tone and look as he uttered the words did complete justice to the dignified old school to which he belonged.

"If you will be good enough to open and read those letters," Drake said, holding out his manacled hands with an apologetic smile. Mr. Fielding adjusted his glasses higher up his thin nose. Two seamen entered the companionway and clumped down the stairs. One staggered under a heavy sea-chest, canvas covered, tied, sealed, and grommetted. The other shouldered a sea bag, full packed and before voices were heard close overhead in the saloon. There was Mary's voice, eager and excited at her first visit to a new foreign port; the skipper's gruff voice answering some question with ill humor; and—Drake sat up in spite of his cramp and irons, banging his head on a beam, but tingling with eagerness—another voice, the voice of a stranger, saying:

"I cannot tell you anything further, Captain, except in Mr. Drake's presence. Isn't he on board?"

"He's on board all right! In irons!"

"In irons?" The stranger's voice sounded shocked. Drake laughed aloud. "Whatever for?"

"See here, Mister," cut in Stevens' voice harshly,

CRABTREE SENDS BOOSTER LETTER FOR CALIFORNIA

Former Dixon Man Can Not See Any Other Place on Earth.

H. H. Crabtree, former Dixon man, entering a prize letter contest conducted by the Los Angeles, Calif. Times, has written the following very interesting letter to William Nixon, Secretary of Dixon Lodge No. 779 B. P. O. Elks:

Mr. Wm. Nixon,
Sec'y B. P. O. Elks, No. 779,
Dixon, Illinois.

Dear Sir and Brothers:—
The last letter I received from you was dated December 25th, 1924. On that day, you said it was 28 degrees below. That sounded nice—from this distance!

As you know, I joined the Lodge back there 23 years ago the 9th of next month, coming to California the following spring, arriving in Los Angeles on March 16th, 1903—and never been back. Since living out here, I have never been the same! And conditions are not what they were represented to be by the Eastern press! We were told that we were coming to the "Land of Sunshine and Flowers." It poured that day, but the flowers were out. When we left Illinois, we were informed that no overcoats were worn out here and that a person could wear B. V. D's the year around. Some more bunk!

When we landed here I started in to read a paper called the "Los Angeles Times," and have read it every day since—Sundays and Holidays included—swallowing all the dope it prints. But at that its more reliable than those W. R. H. sheets—which I never buy, much less read.

I have, at different times (from stuff obtained from the "Times") written both you and the home paper—the Telegraph—telling of the wonders of this country. But now I see my sad mistake. But—

The "Times" is now offering cash prizes for the best articles telling the truth about Southern California and Los Angeles in particular, to combat the false attacks on this section which have been widely circulated throughout America. So, if they give a prize for the worst one, perchance I shall win a buck or two—which I'll send to you pronto for charity.

As here goes:
Los-Ange-hay-lais.
There are many different ways of pronouncing this word: Eastern style, Los-an-ge-less; Western fashion, Los or L. A., and 23 others—none of 'em right.

We have a wonderful climate out here—two kinds: "Perfectly lively" and "very unusual."

Los Angeles ranked only 4th in building in the U. S. for 1924—too bad, is it not? That year there were erected 8 or 10 12-story office buildings in the downtown district. All are still standing, but strange to say, are unoccupied—after 6 p. m.

Its getting to be a back town now

ABE MARTIN

"He ought t' be back now, he just stepped out a moment t' git a character, witness," said Boodlegger Ike Lark's wife t' a caller this mornin'. Movie censorin' should begin at home.

Since they passed an ordinance preventing you from crossing the street in the middle of the block. You can do so back there any time—sans arrest.

This town is going backward. They are contemplating a railroad terminal. What one man on this committee, (name deleted by censor) did to the railroads of this country during the war was a crime! Npff sed.

Business is punk here. One firm—

SALES 2 1/2 TIMES THOSE OF ANY OTHER BRAND

the National Cash Register Company of Dayton, O., reports that for four separate months out of the last 15 its Los Angeles agency led all other cities of the world in sales. And other lines in like proportion. 500 of their star salesmen will be here the 31st on a trip from the East—to look us over and expose themselves and their families (if any) to our hoof-and-mouth disease or some other equally terrible plague. How careless of them!

We now see we made an awful mistake in locating here. They had an earthquake disaster in a little town north of here in 1906. Took a trip up there to see the ruins. Asked a man gave him the impression we were just from the East, what kind of a burg L. A. was. He said, "Why, if you are well, this is the place you want to live; but if you are sick, that's the place for you." No wonder so many M. D.'s down here!

The "Times" stated recently that 2,000 tourists are arriving here daily. Quilen sabe? Many do come out here at this time of the year, however. From the east and middle west to see California (principally from car windows and real-estate offices) then go back in the spring and tell their neighbors they've seen it all. It can't be did!

People work hard here 51 weeks in the year; the 52nd week they all go down to Long Beach for an annual swim and fish. But, take it from me, there's no fish out of the ocean that can compare with a cat from old Rock River!

We have no slum districts here, but lots of poverty. Some families are so poor they can afford but one auto—and that a Ford!

Never sell a lot you buy here. A L. A. Realtor may promise to turn it for you 17 days after you buy at a profit—but its a 40 to 1 shot he's a pretty bum prophet. Hang on to it, mebbey one of Doheney's men may discover oil on it—and make you rich over night!

Over 200 of us now out here from the old home town—but none of 'em are satisfied and would like to be back there—on a trip! But at that we love California, even though we don't like it here. And most of the married men are still living with their wives they brought out with them—as far as known.

We hold a picnic and console each other on our fate.

All now pass on to the next cage, to view the—
I forgot to say not to eat celery, cabbage or lettuce shipped east from this state, for its full of typhoid germs—so eastern reports say. People out here, however, eat it at their peril!

Yours fraternally,
H. H. Crabtree,
2525 E. 27th St.
Los Angeles, Calif.

More Testimony Given Against Prison Heads

Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 10.—(By the Associated Press.)—Samuel Rothberg, Atlanta business man, testified today in the trial of A. E. Sartain and L. J. Fletcher, former officials of the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary and Laurence Riehl, Columbus, Ohio, that he told Fletcher early in 1924 that if he would "take care" of Fred Haar, senior, Savannah, Ga., convicted of violating the prohibition law, he would be given $15,000.

Fletcher, Sartain and Riehl are charged with conspiracy and bribery as a result of a federal investigation of alleged conditions at the prison.

Creditors of Avery Co. to Get Seven Per Cent

Peoria, Ill., Feb. 10.—A seven and one-half per cent dividend will be declared for creditors of the bankrupt Avery Co., this week, according to referee-in-bankruptcy D. H. Gregg. The dividend will mean about $300,000 and follows a first and recent dividend of 15 per cent. Another seven and one-half per cent dividend will be declared soon, according to the referee. The Peoria factory of the concern is doing a flourishing business, manufacturing parts. The dividends are being paid with profits from this kind of work and not from the sale of property. Sale of the concern's Milwaukee plant is set for some time this month. Dividends of about $600,000 have already been paid. Labor claims have been paid.

British Suggestions to France Called Generous

Paris, Feb. 10.—(By The Associated Press.)—The official impression of the note on the inter-allied debt question from Winston Churchill, British chancellor of the exchequer, is more favorable than the opinion of the document expressed by the French newspapers, editorially, it was said today in circles near Premier Herriot. The British suggestions are regarded as very generous and as presenting only one important difficulty, that involved in the separation of debts from reparations, it was declared.

A THREE DAYS' COUGH IS YOUR DANGER SIGNAL

Chronic coughs and persistent colds lead to serious lung trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with twofold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and kills the germ.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by the medical fraternity as the greatest healing agency for the treatment of chronic coughs and colds and other forms of throat and lung troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and destroys the germs that lead to consumption.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of chronic coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, catarrhal bronchitis, and other forms of throat and lung disease, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold, no matter of how long standing, is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. Creomulsion Co., Atlanta, Ga. (Adv.)

The Madness of Youth

When he left his childhood sweetheart in the little town where they were born, and went to the city to embark on a "career," he began counting the days when he could return and make her his wife. But he knew little of the lure of the great city, with all its follies and gaieties, to turn his head and blot his childhood sweetheart from his memory.

The experienced lifelong man in the city is an all too common one—but it serves to prove that love is a holy and sacred thing, and that he who yields to the voice of the tempter simply invites disillusionment, defeat and tragedy. Don't miss this vividly dramatic true life story, "The Sinner and the Code," in True Story Magazine for March. Now on sale.
